

Statement of participation

Olena Kulish

has completed the free course including any mandatory tests for:

The family at the centre of early learning

This 9-hour course focused on the positive learning relationships that can exist in any family and how domestic activities can sustain learning.

Issue date: 24 April 2023

www.open.edu/openlearn

This statement does not imply the award of credit points nor the conferment of a University Qualification.
This statement confirms that this free course and all mandatory tests were passed by the learner.

Please go to the course on OpenLearn for full details:

<https://www.open.edu/openlearn/education-development/the-family-the-centre-early-learning/content-section-0>

COURSE CODE: E109_1

The family at the centre of early learning

<https://www.open.edu/openlearn/education-development/the-family-the-centre-early-learning/content-section-0>

Course summary

This free course, The family at the centre of early learning, focuses on the positive learning relationships that can exist in any family and how ordinary, everyday domestic activities can sustain learning. You will consider how the traditions and cultural practices of the community to which the family belongs filters through to the child's experiences. In doing so you will think about why such influences may not have a uniform impact from family to family. You will also explore how learning is a two way experience for both children and their parents or carers, in situations both within and beyond the home.

Learning outcomes

By completing this course, the learner should be able to:

- consider how a person's childhood experiences of family practices and traditions can influence the way they parent their own children
- describe what companionable learning involves
- outline why the influence of a community's culture on children's experiences will vary from family to family
- discuss how children and parents extend their understanding of each other when they attend group sessions run by early childhood practitioners.

Completed study

The learner has completed the following:

Section 1

Remembering childhood

Section 2

Exploring learning in family situations

Section 3

The influence of culture on children's learning and experiences

Section 4

Learning in the family: attending groups together

Section 5

Quiz

Section 6

Further thinking and discussion points

Section 7

Conclusion