

Statement of participation

Volodymyr Moroz

has completed the free course including any mandatory tests for:

Introduction to critical criminology

This 2-hour free course introduced critical criminology and its stance on the concepts, practices and institutions associated with crime.

Issue date: 23 February 2023

www.open.edu/openlearn

This statement does not imply the award of credit points nor the conferment of a University Qualification.
This statement confirms that this free course and all mandatory tests were passed by the learner.

Please go to the course on OpenLearn for full details:

<https://www.open.edu/openlearn/society-politics-law/introduction-critical-criminology/content-section-0>

COURSE CODE: D867_1

Introduction to critical criminology

<https://www.open.edu/openlearn/society-politics-law/introduction-critical-criminology/content-section-0>

Course summary

This free course, Introduction to critical criminology, provides a brief introduction to critical criminological thinking. It defines the ways in which critical criminologists take a 'critical stance' on the fundamental concepts, practices and institutions associated with crime and criminal justice systems.

Learning outcomes

By completing this course, the learner should be able to:

- define how critical criminology differs from mainstream criminology
- identify key features of critical criminological perspectives
- identify the theoretical building-blocks in critical criminology
- provide examples of the way critical criminologists think about crime 'differently'.

Completed study

The learner has completed the following:

Section 1

Mainstream or standard criminology

Section 2

The development of critical criminology

Section 3

Critical analysis: Two examples

Section 4

Key features of critical criminology

Section 5

Conclusion